Tips for Preparing to get Back to School in Person: How to Help at Home

- Begin talking now about what will look and feel different when your child returns to school.
 Have low pressure conversations about class sizes, masks, and changes in some activities such as recess and lunch. If kids know what to expect, they feel more in control and this can ease some worry.
- Have your child practice wearing a mask. Normalize this as a way that we help keep each other safe and a way that they can be a helpful classmate and friend.
- Provide focused time to listen to and validate your child's feelings and questions. Help them name the emotion they are feeling, including the difficult or challenging emotions. Doing this while doing an activity (such as taking a walk, while driving, or while cooking together) often encourages children to talk and open up.
- Focus on the positive and what your child is excited about or enjoyed during the school day. Ask what they are looking forward to, or about a friend or activity they are excited about. Ask what the best part of their day way was.
- Provide a set schedule and routine for each setting: remote learning days as well as in school days. As much as possible, maintain a set schedule and routine for mornings and evenings.
 Support your child's development in this by creating a morning and evening checklist with them.
- Visit school and rehearse and role play the drop off routine. Help your child get familiar with the procedures that have changed (entering through a different door, entering the building on their own or with school staff only, etc). We will share information to help you prepare, practice and talk it out ahead of time with your child.
